OUR THANKS

PRODUCTION SPONSOR

ELAINE LIPINSKY FAMILY FOUNDATION

Daughter of the late Dorris and Bernard Lipinsky, Elaine Lipinsky was a stalwart supporter of The Old Globe, regularly attending performances and sponsoring plays and musicals. The Lipinsky family's tradition of generous support to the Globe began in the 1950s, and it was extremely important to Elaine that this tradition continue. She shared her parents' love of the Globe and its service to the community, and she carried on their legacy of support through her own foundation and advocacy. Her personal commitment endures through her daughters, Kamaya Jane and Diane Zeps—a third generation of the Lipinsky family helping make theatre accessible and meaningful for all of San Diego.

We thank all our generous patrons and supporters—including government funders—who help make theatre matter to more people.

All public funding represents less than three percent of our annual budget, but that support, especially from The City of San Diego, is crucial.

Please tell your local and state representatives that theatre matters to you.

OUR THANKS

Welcome to The Old Globe!

While the characters in Native Gardens may not find much mirth in a disputed property line, you and I are in for some good laughs with this culture-clash comedy thanks to the talents of award-winning playwright Karen Zacarías. She is currently one of the most-produced playwrights in America, and the Globe is honored to present one of her newest works to San Diego. I love a good comedy, and all the more so when it reveals itself to be a story of empathy and understanding. What a fantastic use of a playwright’s imagination and an audience’s energy!

I consider it a true honor to band together with my fellow arts lovers and San Diegans to support this treasured theatre, which not only brings us important new plays that very often become part of the national theatre canon, but also retells unforgettable classics, amazes with showstopping musicals, and more. Many regional theatres would be thrilled to excel in just one of these areas, but the Globe achieves them all—and it doesn’t stop there.

Through groundbreaking programs like the Globe for All Tour, sensory-friendly performances, Community Voices playwriting workshops, and so much more, the Globe is impacting lives and bringing theatre to the furthest reaches of San Diego County, from schools and senior centers to military bases and correctional facilities.

Your support is what makes all of this possible. Without the underpinnings of our devoted, dynamic donors, the Globe would not be the leading American theatre it is today. I hope that if you are not already a donor, you will consider joining the Friends of The Old Globe with an annual gift of $50 or more. Every new gift or increased contribution through June 30 will be matched one-to-one by an anonymous donor, making double the impact for the Globe. Special experiences and excellent benefits await you, but most of all, you will help sustain and grow this cherished theatre.

Thank you for joining us—enjoy the show!

THE PLAY

FROM BARRY

The 2017–2018 Season in the Sheryl and Harvey White Theatre closes with the Globe debut of one of the most produced playwrights in the United States. Karen Zacarias’s plays—which explore the Latinx experience in our country in a voice that’s warm and witty, and through a theatrical sensibility that’s energetic and expressive—are wildly popular at theatres large and small in every region of the country. Tonight’s play, Native Gardens, either has recently been or soon will be produced by major companies in Cincinnati, Orlando, Chicago, Minneapolis, Washington DC, and other cities. While the Globe is redoubling its commitment to world premiere plays developed through our own new works programs—indeed, Karen Zacarias holds a commission from the Globe and will soon deliver to us a new play—we also relish the opportunity to bring to San Diego the shows that have captured the imagination of the national field. Regional theatres serve local audiences in many ways, and our obligation to produce exciting work carries us from new material to classics, and from presenting world premieres to showcasing the country’s most popular plays.

Nationwide interest of the sort Native Gardens is receiving doesn’t arise all that often in our regional theatre scene. When it does, it’s a sure sign that the play in question has touched a nerve, that it has mined a theme that’s alive and resonant at this moment in our culture’s life. Here, that theme is gentrification, or, more broadly, how places change. In every American city in which this play is being seen, there are neighborhoods like our own North Park and South Park and East Village, places where new people are arriving and replacing—and sometimes displacing—long-term residents and the cultures they’ve built. The newcomers renovate and refresh and bring with them their own institutions, often coffeehouses and restaurants and bars and shops and galleries, but the process of change is rarely smooth.

The surprise of Native Gardens is that it flips our shopworn understanding of American gentrification on its head. Whereas the typical view sees new arrivals as generally well-to-do and white, and longtime residents as lower-income and ethnically diverse, here the identities are reversed. This is the play’s freshness, and, I believe, the thing about it that has captured theatre companies’ imaginations nationwide. In the play, Tania and Pablo are a Latinx couple who settle down in a genteel and WASPy precinct of our nation’s capital where “Latinx” is a term that’s, well, hardly in general use. The tensions that arise between them and their establishment neighbors, Frank and Virginia, are the same ones that bubble up in gentrifying neighborhoods everywhere: a culture clash between the old and the new, between the way things have always been and the way things might be. That Zacarias has turned the cultural affinities around allows her to delve into the thornier, less comfortable currents that course through American urban transformation: class, race, age, and privilege. Immigration and how it shapes our collective culture, perhaps the most contentious of current political issues, is also, of course, an implicit concern.

Zacarias navigates these sensitive areas with a light touch and a considerable sprinkling of humor. Arguments resolve in comedy, and everyone is likeable: we can empathize with both sides of the story. That the central metaphor of the play is a garden is a particularly felicitous touch: in the end, what matters most is how best to make a place grow, how to encourage beauty, bounty, and productivity. It’s a positive vision of a knotty social problem, and it’s what theatre does best: bringing opposites into conflict with each other and forging a new and better truth out of difference.

Along the way, Native Gardens also glances at questions of home, family, and the transmission of wisdom from one generation to the next. And it’s a delightful look at Washington DC not so much as the well-known place of stolid bureaucracies and august institutions, but instead as a thriving city where people actually live. I really like this play, and I’ve really enjoyed being around it. It gives me a glimpse of the America in which I want to live, the kind of community in which I want to raise my children.

Just as Karen Zacarias is fast becoming a family member at the Globe, her director Edward Torres is doing the same. Eddie did a superb job with Water by the Spoonful in my first season as Artistic Director here, and I could not be more pleased to welcome him back. He has once again assembled a thrillingly talented team of designers and actors who are at the highest level of national achievement. Together they have made an evening of theatre that is fun, provocative, and current. I am grateful to them all.

Thanks for coming. Enjoy the show.

Primal, Poetic, and Absurd

Playwright Karen Zacarías and director Edward Torres talk about the pleasures and the challenges of staging Native Gardens.

INTERVIEW BY DANIELLE MAGES AMATO

KAREN ZACARÍAS

Karen, what was the spark that led you to writing Native Gardens?

Karen Zacarías: I had a commission from Cincinnati Playhouse in the Park, and I wasn't sure what to write. Then I went to a dinner party and a friend of mine said, "Oh, I know what you can write about, I'm in a fight with my neighbor!" He described the fight, and then someone else at the party told his story of fighting with a neighbor. And then someone else said, "Well, my mom is in a fight with her neighbor," and on and on. I sat there listening to all these neighbor stories, and I realized that all of them were primal and poetic—and at their root, extremely absurd. But of course all of our conflicts, personal or international, start with the smallest things. I wanted to find out what I could learn about my own behavior and the world's behavior by looking at two different couples fighting over something that seems very small.

Are you a big gardener?

KZ: No, I'm not! The whole native gardening thing I had to learn about, and I've actually become a big proponent of it. I mean, what's not to love? It's easier, it's better for the environment, all of that. But at the same time there are a lot of beautiful flowers and plants I love that I didn't realize were non-native. So I've learned a lot, but gardening is hard, hard work at the end of the day, as those who are real gardeners can attest. It's not something you go into lightly!

Eddie, what drew you to this piece as a director?

Edward Torres: First of all, Karen is great, and the play is great. And secondly, it's a comedy with big issues right underneath the humor. It's entertaining, but we also talk about class, we talk about race, and we talk about Latinx issues. Plus, we so rarely get to see Latinx couples on stage who are lawyers and doctors with Ph.D.s. And I have my own stories about neighbors and fences—I've lived this play, man! I totally lived it. I am not kidding.

How would you describe the neighbor relationship in the play?

ET: Well, it's a situation that's complex. Even though we think that it would be very simple to solve, when push comes to shove, it isn't. And I think we identify with everyone in the situation. One of the brilliant things that Karen has done is to give it a time constraint. They've got six days to solve this problem—they have to navigate this entire situation in six days, with the difference of opinion, difference of race, difference of class, and everything else. It's hilarious but also very real.

Karen, theatres across the country are doing Native Gardens. What do you think has made it successful in so many places?

KZ: No matter where you are on the political divide, I think the play is disarming. And the moment you laugh, you have to let your defenses down. So it's a chance for people to laugh and feel a sense of communion with their neighbors—because really the people we're laughing at are ourselves. Even though the play does touch on some very thorny issues—excuse the pun there—the characters are all coming from a good place. We've all been in this situation, and nobody's a hero, nobody's a villain. Everybody is right and wrong simultaneously throughout the play. It's so nice to be in the theatre with people who may have completely different backgrounds, completely different politics, completely different ways of gardening than you do, and to hear everybody in the room laugh. I think it reminds people of our common humanity a little bit.

What were you both looking for in the casting of the piece?

ET: I was looking for actors who could understand the story, find the humor, but also still give it a sense of reality. Actors who are sincere but also have comic timing.

KZ: What surprises me over and over again is how much hard work a comedy is. Harder than a drama. It's really humbling, and I think very few people know how hard it is not just to write one, but to act in one and direct one, because timing and precision are everything.

Eddie, would you talk a bit about the visual world of the play?

ET: Being in the round, it's very difficult to have two actual houses, so what we've focused on are the yards—and of course the plants, the fence, and the tree itself. The distinction between the two yards is super important. One is very pristine and clean and lovely; the other, you know, it needs some work. And the tree is in the exact center of the stage.

Was it a challenge to have a tree in the middle of the stage when working in the round?

ET: Collette Pollard, our scenic designer, was masterful at helping me decide how we were going to do that. We placed it strategically between the stage entrances on either side, and we sunk the floor eight inches so that the set would work better. But what it meant for me was that the timing and the flow of the play had to be continuous. I've got to keep those actors moving so that you can see everything, and the timing has to be crisp and precise.

What do you hope the audience takes away from the play?

KZ: First of all, I hope they're really entertained. And I think it's a play that will come up again in people's thoughts as they deal with their yards and with other people. I hope it's sneaky in that way—that it's not only entertaining but also a little subversive, in the sense that it gets under your skin.

ET: I would have to agree with that. It's very funny, but in the end it opens a conversation about how we act with our neighbors, how we approach people, how we deal with the fact that everyone around us is also a human being.

KZ: And there's a happy hopeful ending! I hope people leave with hope too.

ET: Yes, exactly. That's really important. Hope for the future. ■

THE UNIVERSAL LANGUAGE OF THEATRE

An Interview with Coco Rios Fidel

Interview by Damon J. Shearer

For a decade Coco Rios Fidel has served her community as branch manager at the Otay Mesa-Nestor Branch Library, located only three and a half miles from the U.S.–Mexico border in the South Bay. As a voice for a community that is 75 percent Latinx, Rios Fidel has spearheaded programs ranging from book clubs to ESL and citizenship classes for both young and old patrons. The library's partnership with The Old Globe is the most recent addition to its programming, joining a very popular art therapy class to bring creative opportunities to a community of low-income families hungry for access to the arts. Here Rios Fidel shares her experience working with The Old Globe on the 2017 Globe for All Tour of William Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

How did your community respond to the Globe for All production of Twelfth Night?

It was very inspiring for a lot of people. We had an excellent turnout, over 120 people. They got all dressed up in their Sunday best. The Teaching Artist, Tara Ricasa, led the pre-show engagement portion and asked how many people were watching a professional play for the first time. About 65 percent of them raised their hands. That gave me chills, and I got a bit emotional. This is a community that can't afford things like a play, let's be honest, and for 65 percent to raise their hands was so touching to me.

People also really liked how the play was bilingual. One couple, whose primary language is Spanish, came to me and said a play is like a universal language. Just watching it, you understand it. Shakespeare can be very intimidating, but The Old Globe did an awesome job demystifying Shakespeare for English learners. They made it fun, easy, and interactive. That's what they loved most.

Have you seen a growing interest in theatre from your community since the Globe for All Tour?

Yes, and they want me to bring more! We've already taken that step and started the Behind the Curtain theatre-making program here, and people are loving it. One grandmother is attending with her grandson. She said that they have bonded so much over this, and he even started taking drama classes in high school after joining the workshops.

Why is the partnership between The Old Globe and the Otay Mesa-Nestor Branch Library important?

It is bringing the arts into the community. The Globe is giving people inspiration, showing them that there is more out there for them. This goes along with our mission at the library to inspire people to learn through connection with each other. By coming to our facility, the Globe is providing that. It's providing an opportunity for the public to explore and strive. The Old Globe is making a huge impact on children, teens, and their parents, and they are doing things together as families. That is very important.

Coco Rios Fidel.
